Life cycle analysis

Ecological awareness.

To buy responsibly means to keep for a longer time.

For us at Kettal, ecology is not marketing. It’s a very serious matter. We have analyzed the variants of product life cycle to minimize environmental impact as far as possible. Not only in our raw material usage, but also other variables such as CO2 emissions from transport or use and durability.

Raw materials: Not only are they recyclable but also recycled. We study the impact of the material over time. There is no point using a very ecological material if, due to its construction, it needs to be replaced many times during the product’s life cycle, thus multiplying the pollution caused by its production process.

Okm production: Trying to produce all components close to our Kettal production center in Barcelon is one of the brand’s objectives to reduce CO2. The essential raw materials used at Kettal, such as fabric, rope and aluminum, are produced within a radius of 100km.

Use and durability: We do not build in obsolescence. Each design is aesthetically designed and technically developed to last as long as possible. The longer a product lasts, the less often it has to be replaced and therefore the fewer production processes that have to be carried out.

Accordingly, we at Kettal keep technical drawings and product patterns that are 30 years old in order to be able to replace components and extend the life of the product.

Kettal is developing and manufacturings in Europe with a straight focus on the LEED standard requirements. Kettal Quality & Certification management team is coordinating the LEED Certification process with an external LEED specialist consultant.

Selection of local partners and suppliers (Short Distance Supply Chain).

Selection of long life cycle manufacturing components and techniques (Aluminum, coating, fabrics, foams, secured glass).

Selection of environmental certified materials (OekoTEX, EPD, FSC).

Selection of recycled and/or recycled materials (Recycled aluminum, recycled foam, recycled fabric).
